A rich old woman lived in luxury in a large house in an expensive part of town. Due to old age, however, her sight grew worse until eventually she was totally blind.

One day she heard about a physician who had recently moved into her area. As he had a reputation for successfully treating blindness, she asked him to visit her. The physician said he could help her see again, but he asked such an unreasonably high price that the old woman was shocked.

"I will pay you what you ask," said the woman, "but only on the condition that you cure me, If you do not, you shall receive nothing."

So the physician began weekly visits to her home to treat her eyes. Thinking that the woman would not enjoy her wealth for long, after every visit he took with him an item from the house. He continued coming every week and soon he had stolen everything valuable.

After many more visits, the woman was able to see again and the physician demanded payment, however, when the woman saw what had happened, she refused to pay and so the physician took her to court.

When the judge had heard the physician's story, it was time for the old woman to speak, "Sir, it is true that I promised to pay this man, but only if he cures me," said the woman. "He says he has made me see again but I disagree. Before my blindness, I could see paintings on my walls and gold and silver in my cabinet. Now, I see none of it."
